

THE TIRELESS PARENT

What Happens to Our Kids, Our Parents, and Ourselves When AI Humanoid Robots Come Home

Hugo Alder

Translation rights available in all languages except English and Spanish. World rights are held by the author.

THE BOOK

An essay about what happens in a family when an AI humanoid robot comes into the home: our kids, our aging parents, and ourselves. Every fact in the book is linked to its source in a glossary at the end. It opens with a scene: one night the author yelled at his nine-year-old son and, the next morning, told the AI on his phone instead of his wife.

BOOK DETAILS

Author	Hugo Alder (pen name)
Genre	Narrative nonfiction essay
Editions	English (The Tireless Parent) · Spanish (El padre incansable)
Publication	November 16, 2026, both editions · Amazon · independently published
Formats	Kindle eBook · Paperback · Hardcover
Print length	English: 152 pages · Spanish: 158 pages · 5.5 × 8.5 in
Sources	More than 350, linked in a glossary at the end

CONTENTS

Introduction · The Hallway Manifesto in the Age of Superintelligence
1 · The Speed of Synthetic Empathy
2 · The Marginal Cost of Affection
3 · The Dining Table: The Work Nobody Paid For
4 · Comfort vs. Guilt, and Status Parenting
Interlude · A Function That Isn't Mine
5 · The Valley of Trust: Design and Hyperrealism
6 · The Legislative Trench and the Two Speeds
7 · The Synthetic Generation
8 · The Revolution for Synthetic Rights
Epilogue · The Refuge of the Imperfect

WHAT MAKES IT DIFFERENT

Every fact in the book links to the page where it was published. It is the essay of a father who makes his living creating characters for children.

Before publication, every researcher and organization cited received the passage in which their work appears. Prof. Katja Schlegel (University of Bern) reviewed and confirmed in writing the passage in Chapter 1, and two other cited researchers confirmed theirs as well. Dr. Julie Carpenter provided factual corrections concerning the description of her research (Chapter 8).

CONTACT

hugo@hugoalder.com